

Funded by the Health Programme
of the European Union

Marieke Kroezen

Dr. Marieke Kroezen was trained as a medical sociologist and currently works as a postdoctoral researcher at the KU Leuven Institute for Healthcare Policy at the Catholic University Leuven, Belgium. She works on several studies on a broad range of issues related to the health workforce, including recruitment & retention, planning and forecasting and common training frameworks. In the past, she worked as a research associate at the Centre for Health Innovation, Leadership and Learning (CHILL) at the University of Nottingham (UK) on major trauma networks and the Netherlands Institute for Health Services Research (NIVEL). In 2014, she completed her PhD entitled 'Nurse prescribing: a study on task substitution and professional jurisdictions'.